THEY JUST DON'T GET IT

A while back I saw a t-shirt with this delightful observation on the back: "Heaven is where the police are British, where the chefs are Italian, where the mechanics are German, where the lovers are French and it is all organized by the Swiss. Hell is where the police are German, where the chefs are British, where the mechanics are French, where the lovers are Swiss and it is all organized by the Italians."

I suspect most of us would agree and with a smile on our face. But there would be those who would say the T-shirt was stereotyping people. Well, of course! But I would assert that the observation is more typical than stereo. Italian cuisine over British? No contest. Swiss vs. Italian governing? No contest. Italy has averaged two parliaments a year since WWII. Rather the point of the observation is that we are all different, that it takes all kinds and types of people to make up this world, this country, this church of ours. But there are those who just don't get it.

I love the Olympics. Athletes from all over the world come together to test their skills against one another. Fierce but friendly competition because each knows the work it took to just get to the Games let alone winning a medal. I always root for the athletes from the USA but truly enjoy the side-stories of other athletes from around the world and the work and hardships they went through to make it to the Games. Every athlete deserves a medal just for making it that far.

Some would say that the tongue-in-cheek T-shirt philosophy or that behind the Olympic Games is all hokum, a pipe dream, even wrong. They would say that those of us who believe we are all equal even though we are all different, of different types and cultures, that we just don't get it. It is they who just don't get it. It is precisely our diversity that makes this world, and especially this country of ours, such a wonderful place to live in, even with that which is not so wonderful – and there is a lot of that to be sure.

Diversity is what makes for growth. If we all looked, thought, believed alike, it would be the most boring world to live in. If that were the case, my guess is that there would be rebels who would somehow rise up to challenge our thinking, acting and believing. The truth is we have too many rebels or rebels who rise up for the wrong reason: they want everyone to be and think and believe and act as they do. And, sadly, they often use violent means to try to force and enforce their beliefs. They will never succeed in spite of their efforts. We are just too diverse as a people.

If blame is to be found why Italians, by and large, are better cooks than the British and the Swiss are better than governing that the Italians and Norwegians are better in Winter Olympics than Summer, then that blame rests entirely on God's shoulders. God created us different. If God wanted us to be all alike, that is the way God would have created us. Those who think otherwise just don't get it.

The Children's Corner

Try, Try, Again!

We have a lot of sayings about trying and making a good impression. One expression I used to hear a lot is you only get one chance to make a first impression. But then I would also hear, if at first you don't succeed, try, try, again.

So which is it? A good first impression or a series of trying?

I know my first attempt at doing something is hard. I am . . . afraid I might make a mistake, or I am afraid I will fail. My mother would encourage me to keep on trying but always try by doing my best. So when I was not successful, and there have been many times I was NOT successful at first, I could try again but also know I tried my best.

Like that time I failed a test I thought I had studied for when I was studying German in High School. After I got an F, in red, on the top of the test, I had to take it home and have my parents sign it. My mother asked, did I try my best? I thought I had, I said I thought I had but maybe I could try harder. So the next test, I studied more frequently, a little every day, and then the night before the test, I studied my notes, and I got an A on the test. And the next year, I got all As in German and I was invited to join the German National Honor Society.

But what does this have to do with fig trees? And if you listen to the Gospels, what does Jesus have against fig trees?

Well, in this week's Gospel lesson, Jesus tells a story about a man who had a fig tree in his vineyard. He went to the vineyard expecting to find some figs on his tree, but there were none. He said to the man who took care of the vineyard, "For three years I have been coming expecting to find figs on this tree and I haven't found any. Cut it down! It is just taking up space."

"Leave it alone for one more year," the keeper of the vineyard begged. "I will dig around it and put fertilizer on it. If it has fruit next year, fine. If not, then cut it down."

At this point in the story, who hasn't done their best? The tree, the keeper of the vineyard, or the owner? Who knows – but the keeper of the vineyard, said wait. Give it some time, let me try again. Let me try harder. I'll do more work, I'll make some changes if you give me time, I think the tree will produce fruit.

But what the story is really about, is about forgiveness. God expects us to do our best and produce good things for God, but if we don't God doesn't get rid of us, God gives us more time to get things right.

And what does God expect from us? Well, not figs, but "fruits of the spirit" like love, joy, peace, patience, goodness, and kindness. Just as the owner of the vineyard gave the fig tree another chance, God keeps giving us more and more chances and it is important for us to know that we don't have to do it alone. The keeper of the vineyard helped the tree by working the soil and adding fertilizer. When we allow Jesus to work in our lives, Jesus helps us to produce the kind of fruit that God expects.

Peace,
Julie+
